CHEAPENING THE COST OF POWER.

The motor world is conscious of the fact cheaper fuel is necessary to maintain and keep attractive the horseless carriages now owned by every tenth family in some sections of New England, and every fifth family in some parts of the west. Gasoline in the past five years has quadrupled in price, and is still risg with no definite limit in sights, hence, gasoline must be re-enforced with something cheaper, if even it somewhat reduces the combustability and lessens the power of the present

We learn from English exchanges that a new automatic paraffin attach-ment for use either with a switch or a zenith carburetter has been invented, which reduces the petrol four-fifths without seriously impairing the efficiency of the power, the per cent. of paraffin being 80 to 20 per cent. of
